The American Academy of Family Physicians Launches Consumer Alliance with First Partner: The Coca-Cola Company

LEAWOOD, Kan.--(BUSINESS WIRE)-- The American Academy of Family Physicians today announced the Consumer Alliance, a new corporate partnership program, with its first alliance partner, The Coca-Cola Company.

The Consumer Alliance is a program that allows corporate partners like The Coca-Cola Company to work with the AAFP to educate consumers about the role their products can play in a healthy, active lifestyle. As part of this partnership, The Coca-Cola Company is providing a grant to the AAFP to develop consumer education content on beverages and sweeteners for FamilyDoctor.org, an award-winning consumer health and wellness resource.

"The AAFP recognizes the significant influence that consumer companies have on consumer health," said Lori Heim, M.D., president-elect of the AAFP. "We look forward to working with The Coca-Cola Company, and other companies in the future, on the development of educational materials to teach consumers how to make the right choices and incorporate the products they love into a balanced diet and a healthy lifestyle."

"We are proud to be the first company to partner with the AAFP and feature content on FamilyDoctor.org," said Dr. Rhona Applebaum, vice president and chief scientific and regulatory officer at The Coca-Cola Company. "Our partnership will help provide Americans with credible information on beverages and enable consumers to make informed decisions about what they drink based on individual need."

FamilyDoctor.org was recently named one of "Five Great Health Sites" on a Newsweek.com blog, and one of the "'Top Ten' Most Useful Web Sites" by the Medical Library Association. The new beverage and sweetener content is expected to launch in January 2010. Visit familydoctor.org for more information.

While the AAFP does not endorse any specific brand, product or service, the AAFP Consumer Alliance will collaborate with companies that share the common goal of informing consumers, as well as medical professionals, about new advances in product science and best practices for good health.

About The American Academy of Family Physicians

Founded in 1947, the AAFP represents more than 94,600 physicians and medical students nationwide. It is the only medical society devoted solely to primary care.

Nearly one in four of all office visits are made to family physicians. That is 208 million office visits each year -- nearly 83 million more than the next largest medical specialty. Today, family physicians provide more care for America's underserved and rural populations than any other medical specialty.

In the increasingly fragmented world of health care where many medical specialties limit their practice to a particular organ, disease, age or sex, family physicians are dedicated to treating the whole person across the full spectrum of ages. Family medicine's cornerstone is an ongoing, personal patient-physician relationship focused on integrated care.

About the AAFP Consumer Alliance

In addition to health care providers, AAFP recognizes that consumer products companies have significant influence over consumer health. Therefore, the Consumer Alliance is a strategy whereby AAFP aims to partner with companies who demonstrate good corporate stewardship and a strategic focus on consumer health.

FamilyDoctor.org, AAFP's consumer health and wellness resource, is the fundamental core of the AAFP Consumer Alliance. Through partnerships in the Consumer Alliance, AAFP will continue to expand the reach and breadth of its offerings on FamilyDoctor.org by adding more tools, trackers, videos, and consumer-friendly education materials on important health and wellness topics.

In addition to content development on FamilyDoctor.org, AAFP will work with Consumer Alliance Partners to develop robust new programs and materials to educate consumers and medical professionals about making better choices with regard to food and beverage selections, physical activity, emotional well-being, and other ways to achieve a balanced and healthy lifestyle.
